Old Town Charm Comes to Life

Approximately 27 miles northeast of Austin lies the Hutto Commercial Historic District, which locals commonly refer to as “Old Town”. The buildings in the district reflect Hutto’s rich culture, bringing visitors and residents back to the charming culture of the 1800’s. This historic railroad town is now a family-oriented, fast-growing community that boasts a great quality of life just outside the Austin-Round Rock metro area. In the last decade, Hutto has transformed from a small, rural Central Texas town of only 1,250 to one of Austin’s fastest-growing suburbs with now more than 20,000 residents.

ATTRACTIONS AND RECREATION

Hippo Tour

Legend tells of a 1915 circus train layover in Hutto when a hippo escaped a rail car and made its way over to Cottonwood Creek. This caused much consternation for the circus workers and amusement for the locals who watched unsuccessful efforts to remove the hippo from the muddy water. Eventually, the hippo was returned to the train car. Soon after, the school adopted the hippopotamus as its mascot. Today, Hutto is the only community in the United States with the hippo as its mascot. Businesses and residences alike tout concrete hippos to show their hippo spirit; most are uniquely painted to reflect each owner's personal style. Tour maps may be located at the visitor's center.
