NOT FOR GENERAL DISTRIBUTION

This file contains the names of donors who have "contributed" to the creature. Do not share this information with anyone. Dr. Frankenstein has conducted his "experiments" with our covert cooperation, and his beneficence to the cemetery has been considerable and generous. The nine-hole golf course at the rear of the grounds is particularly appreciated.

To repeat: Never take this file off-property for any reason.

Hans Fischer was a cheese straightener from the village of Aubonne. His head was "acquired" after an unfortunate incident with a scabbard-bearing dervish.

Oliver Meier hailed from Zurich as a humble watchmaker. His unusual timepieces bore the image of a curious, high-spirited rodent. Died of sepsis after consuming some of Hans Fischer's cheese.

Jakob Brunner, late (or rather, very late) of Beromünster, labored on a potato farm. He was something of an inventor, and the less said of his potato masher, the better.

Ernst Graf was a well-loved tailor in the town of Freienbach. His waist coats were particularly fine and praised highly. It is a great pity he went mad and consumed nearly 1,000 sharp bone buttons.

Gerhard Lehman of Klotten was a poet of great romantic epics. Most were dedicated to a mysterious Frau Bündchen. Sadly, her husband discovered the poems in her vanity and bisected Herr Lehman neatly.

Willi Fuchs raised attack falcons near Montreux. Apparently one morning, after three days without food, the birds took a "kill" command too much to heart.

Josef Weber, a troubadour of no fixed abode, was trampled to death by his own audience after an especially poor performance of "Ethel, the Pirate's Daughter."

Otto Kohler from Walenstadt made scrumptious pastries in his popular patisserie. The details of the baking accident that took his life are rather vague.

Heinrich Vogel, resident of Sargans, served in the German military until his brother Thierry regrettably misfired a cannon point blank at him during a sneeze.

Thierry Vogel, brother of Heinrich, perished when his just-killed sibling survived long enough to fire the cannon back.
