Dear Professor Berger:

I approach you with a most unusual request. I am a real estate agent representing one Marie Monstre in the sale of her estate. You may be familiar with her husband, sometimes referred to as Frankenstein's Monster, though we all knew him as Frank. With his passing, Mrs. Monstre is seeking to sell their castle and prior to signing off on the sale. Our title insurance provider has some conditions.

With the eccentricities of the Undead Act of 1053 and the Reanimation Statutes covering the area, Stewart Title has determined that it's in the best interest of all parties to obtain proper paperwork from the many hundreds of descendants of people whose donated parts went toward the construction of said creature agreeing to forego any potential ownership claims, in whole or in part(s). (Couldn't help myself.)

We are seeking your help in locating those descendants. Please forgive the slightly morbid nature of this request, but we ask your cooperation to keep things from falling apart.

Urgently,

Erik Leroux
