DENVER, CO (April 7, 2020) – Mortgage Cadence, an Accenture (NYSE: ACN) company, along with Stewart Title, is announcing Stewart's integration into the Mortgage Cadence Collaboration Center solution, enabling Collaboration Center users to order Stewart title and escrow services from the Mortgage Cadence Platform.

With the integration, Mortgage Cadence customers can place title orders, receive automatic status updates, and make changes to orders from Stewart, while the communications between Mortgage Cadence customers and Stewart are securely transmitted and automatically organized into the loan record — all from within Collaboration Center. The integration also eliminates the human error that often results from filing documents and rekeying data.

“Stewart is a strong addition to the Collaboration Center network, as they're one of the largest real estate service companies in the industry,” said Peter A. Espinosa, CEO, Mortgage Cadence. “By offering our clients access to their services, we're furthering our mission of being the last lending solution our customers will ever need by offering a single system of record that handles everything from origination through to post-closing.”

Collaboration Center reinvents the way lending professionals and settlement-service firms interact automating the organization of the communications, documents and data into both the loan and title record, and providing real-time messaging. Because it eliminates manual email processing and the need for multiple document portals, Collaboration Center helps increase both lenders' and settlement-service firms' efficiency, productivity and profitability.

Scott Gillen, CMB, Senior Vice President, National Agents at Stewart, said, “The importance of an efficient and effective relationship between title companies, lenders, and the lender's mortgage technology partner cannot be overstated. Our integration with Collaboration Center enhances this relationship, simplifying the transaction and improving the lender experience.”
